1. At the 17 June meeting of LCBEFORE's Covert Action Planning Committee, the subject was raised of anti-war literature being circulated among NATO forces. The discussion was prompted by LCBEFORE's acquisition of a "Little Red Book for Soldiers" published in Norwegian by a Danish printer. While no Norwegian speakers were present, the book seemed to contain the usual advice on how to confound authorities, get out of unpleasant duty, and so on. It was generally agreed that the item was probably part of the widely-proliferating protest literature originated by anarchists, pacifists and anti-establishment elements responsible for such a publication (also in Denmark) of a "Little Red Book for Students," which created some stir here last month when it was seized by the British customs. 2. Some question was expressed whether comparable materials were being produced for distribution or sale to troops in other western European countries. An LCBEFORE officer will discuss this subject in a forthcoming visit to NATO Headquarters and will try to determine whether any other titles have cropped up elsewhere. [] speculated on the possible value of issuing such a document in a Russian translation with at least token distribution in the East. Alternatively, he thought such a publication might be picked up and played by TPLINGO. While admitting that the appearance of such disruptive literature in their own ranks might cause the Russian hierarchy some irritation and perhaps lead them into an exploitable over-reaction, we observed that policy considerations would have to be looked at closely and were doubtful, in any case, that TPLINGO could play much of a role for obvious reasons. 3. We would appreciate knowing whether material of this sort has come to our attention in other NATO countries.
